This Month in Civil War History: January

1861: Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas secede from the United States.

1862: Battle of Mill Springs, Kentucky. This Federal victory weakened the Confederate hold on the state

1863: The Emancipation Proclamation goes into effect. The Emancipation Proclamation was a war measure that declared enslaved people in rebelling states to be free, authorized the enlistment of black troops, and outraged white Southerners. The proclamation was an important turning point in the war for the United States and in the eventual shift from the goal of restoring the Union as it was, to building a better Union without slavery.

1864: President Lincoln approved a policy allowing plantation owners to free slaves and rehire them under fair contracts, signaling a shift towards Reconstruction

1865: Assault and capture of Fort Fisher, North Carolina. United States occupation of this fort at the mouth of the Cape Fear River closes access to Wilmington, the last Southern seaport on the east coast that was open to blockade runners and commercial shipping
